

IN A SURVEY GIVEN BY ADS REGARDING DISTANCE LEARNING, STUDENTS SHARED THE FOLLOWING CONCERNS:

I'm concerned about...

...being able to focus and complete work given my home living situation (crowded, lots of distractions, noisy, etc.).

...the ability to continue to receive necessary medication that helps me to regulate my functionality. (Includes students whose medication is held at the Wellness Center).

...receiving extra time for test-taking.

...having a chronic health condition that might be affected by the change in routine and lack of accessibility to certain resources, e.g. going to the gym regularly.

...not being able to access professors through office hours and/or receive one-on-one attention.

...not having the same kinds of visual learning inputs that I'm used to (and that I rely on) within the typical classroom.

...added non-academic responsibilities like taking care of family members or working in order to support my family.

...not having a distraction-reduced environment for test-taking.

...not having all of my accommodations met.

...the unreliability of technology (especially computer and internet).

...tutoring for a specific class and if and how it will continue.

...general focus, motivation, work ethic, and procrastination.

...the quality of the audio in pre-recorded classes or lectures given that I'm hard of hearing.

...the lack of dedicated, quiet study and work spaces, such as the library.
