PROJECT DESCRIPTION

The 2001 Steelton Mosaic continued the work begun by the 1996 Steelton Project, where students and faculty members met with workers, teachers, local business people, and residents of the multi-ethnic community of Steelton, Pennsylvania, which lies along the Susquehanna River on the south side of Harrisburg. The 2001 Steelton Mosaic—co-directed by Professors Kim Rogers (History), Susan Rose (Sociology), and Tyra Seldon (American Studies and English)—focused on work, family, and migration narratives among members of the community, with a particular focus on the Great Migration and the African-American Community.

In 2001, Steelton had close to 6,000 residents with some 33 self-identified ethnic and racial groups. As the first steel mill town dedicated exclusively to the making of steel, Baldwin—later named Steelton—was established in 1866. It drew a diverse workforce from Europe and a significant black population from the South. Many workers were recruited through a process of chain migration by family members and Army buddies.

Thirteen Dickinson College students and three professors took part in the community study immersion project. It consisted of a four credit semester program that integrated three courses plus an independent study or internship, with fieldwork playing an integral part in the experience.

COLLECTION DESCRIPTION

The collection is divided into 5 series. Series 1 consists of 5 folders of course materials, including course syllabi and blank archive deposit and interview forms. Series 2 consists of 25 interview transcripts, typed accounts of Steelton interviews conducted by student and faculty interviewers. Interviews are organized alphabetically according to narrator's last name. Series 3 consists of 9 life histories and student papers. Series 4 consists of 2 folders of blank and completed consent forms. Series 5 consists of corresponding media: 35 audio cassette tapes, 27 video tapes and 26 DV tapes.
