PROJECT DESCRIPTION

The 2001 Patagonia Mosaic examined trans-Atlantic migration, ethnic and labor relations, and community development among various ethnic groups in the oil company town of Comodoro Rivadavia, in Patagonia, Argentina. The project was an initiative of recuperation, preservation and diffusion of the historic experience of the community of Comodoro Rivadavia and its zone of influence, together with its regional, national and international connections. The Patagonia Mosaic included the investigation, teaching, digitalization of documentary and photographic patrimony; the oral and videographic registry of life histories and historic testimonies; and preservation of the collective memory – activities vital to cultural exchange and community extension. By looking deep into local and regional character, the project aimed also to connect to wider national and international study in areas of settlement, migration, and family history.

The undertaking began under the auspices of Dickinson College and the Universidad Nacional de la Patagonia “San Juan Bosco”, with the essential support of the community of Comodoro Rivadavia. At Dickinson, the project enmeshed itself in the work of the Community Studies Center (CSC) and the Dickinson Electronic Initiative in the Liberal Arts (DEILA). Students and faculty engaged in collaborative ethnographic, oral history, and archival research with faculty and students from the National University of Patagonia “San Juan Bosco” and residents from the company towns of the area of Comodoro Rivadavia. The group spent two weeks in Patagonia (January 5-22) and then returned to Dickinson to continue comparative research during the spring semester.

The program was coordinated by Marcelo Borges, Susan Rose, and Susana Torres (Universidad Nacional de la Patagonia), with the collaboration of Lonna Malmshheimer and Sonia Ivanoff (Universidad Nacional de la Patagonia).
